

Guidelines for Placing Content in Electronic Reserve and Blackboard

The following materials are appropriate for Electronic Reserve or Blackboard:

- Quizzes, exams, solutions, syllabus, etc, prepared by instructor.
- U.S. Government publications.
- Material in the public domain (generally for U.S. works, published prior to 1923).
- Articles from electronic journals or electronic books licensed by Hofstra University, with some exceptions (please contact the Library for more information).
- Material available legally on the World Wide Web may normally be linked to, rather than scanned or digitally copied.
- Copyrighted material covered by the Annual Copyright License.
- Student papers (when accompanied by a signed permission form).
- Copyrighted material for which permission has been received from the copyright holder to place the material on Electronic Reserves, or Blackboard. The library has a budget to pay for permissions, but it is limited and may not be enough to cover all your requests.
- Copyrighted material determined to fall under fair use. Each use of a copyrighted work needs to be evaluated individually, as there are no clear-cut and unambiguous rules of fair use. The fair use checklist should be employed for all fair use determinations.

Materials which are not appropriate for Electronic Reserves or Blackboard:

- Consumables, such as standardized tests, work books, lab books, and solutions manuals.
- Multiple chapters of a book.
- Course Packs from the Hofstra University Bookstore.
- Material used repeatedly for the same course by the same professor and not licensed for electronic use by Hofstra University.
- Material from an anthology. Permission is not available to use works from anthologies (such as Annual Editions or other republished selections). Submit a request for the original source material.

Library assistance is available for all steps in developing your list of materials for electronic or print reserve. We will assist you in determining what material is licensed and available electronically, what material is covered by the Annual Copyright License, what material requires permission, and estimated costs for permissions. We can assist with determining whether an item is in the public domain, out of copyright, out of print, etc., and give advice for how to best provide access in accordance with the Hofstra University policy. We can recommend what items may be used in Electronic Reserves or Blackboard, and what should be provided through print reserve or a course pack. We take fair use into consideration in all requests to provide copyrighted content through electronic reserve and document all fair use decisions.

Contact Sarah McCleskey, Head of Access Services at 516-463-5076 or Sarah.E.McCleskey@hofstra.edu for assistance.