Hofstra University Offers Course on Not-For-Profit Employment and Volunteerism

Hofstra University, Hempstead, NY - Hofstra University Continuing Education will offer a new course this fall, Not-For-Profit Employment and Volunteerism. The 10-session evening course will be taught by Paul Arfin, MSW, whose career in the management of not-for-profit organizations spans more than 45 years.

The course begins on Wednesday, September 30 and runs through December 9. The cost of the course is $299.

This course is directed to recent college graduates and mid to late career individuals seeking new purpose and meaning in their lives through employment or volunteerism in Not-for-profit organizations. Students will define personal mission statements and self-assessments and will learn about the myths and realities of the Not-for-profit sector's challenges and opportunities. They will learn how to transfer their private sector employment skill sets into paid and volunteer full-time and part-time management, financial, administrative, technical, and advocacy positions. The course features many guest speakers and visits to not-for-profit organizations.

To register for the course or for more information, visit ce.hofstra.edu/nonprofit or call (516) 463-7800.
