SCHOOL SYMPOSIUM: EDUCATIONAL EQUITY AND RACE: VIEWS FROM MIDDLE AND HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS (by invitation only)

Contemporary school children's views and experiences surrounding the importance of race in their school experiences and interpersonal relationships. Do today's middle and high school youth understand or support the attempts toward creating integrated school environments? To what extent do they experience educational equity as they negotiate their education? Are Brown's goals relevant to their lives? Guided small group discussions by qualified educators will provide a forum for youth to explore their varied feelings about the role of racial and ethnic identification to their individual and collective lives.

Participants:

Millicent E. Brown, Claflin University
Michael D'Innocenzo, Hofstra University
Karen Meadows, Guilford County Schools, NC
Charmaine McKissick-Melton, North Carolina Central University
Jonathan Lightfoot, Alan Singer and Bernard Stein, Hofstra University
Kayla B. Rivara, CCE intern, and civic engagement students

Participating Schools: Alverta B. Gray Schultz Middle School, Hempstead; Levittown Public Schools; Uniondale Public Schools; Garden City High School; Malverne High School; and Huntington High School (in formation)

FROM BROWN (1954) TO BROWN (1963) AND BEYOND:

THE CHALLENGES OF ADVANCING RACE RELATIONS IN SCHOOLS AND SOCIETY

The symposium examines the continuing significance of the 1954 Supreme Court decision Brown vs. Board of Education; the impact of the “First Children” to break school race barriers, including Dr. Millicent E. Brown, South Carolina (Millicent E. Brown et al. vs. School Board District 20), and the current implications of race, education and diversity for Long Island and our nation.

Brown vs. Board of Education declared segregated schools unconstitutional and remains one of the most significant legal decisions of both the past and current century. Recognized as an impetus for more than a decade of civil rights protest against separate and unequal voting rights opportunities, housing, public accommodations and other determinants of first-class citizenship, Brown has received considerable attention by notable scholars.

Much of the emphasis has highlighted the national scope and importance of the decision, focusing on the roles of a few influential attorneys, white liberals and moderates, government figures and organizations. Much less attention has yet to be paid to efforts to actually implement the decision at both local and state levels. Neither events and experiences directly related to those who experienced Brown by being the “First Children” to break through racial barriers, nor multiple subsequent lawsuits and maneuverings to either fulfill or thwart Brown’s lofty goals, have been fully documented.

10 a.m.-Noon SESSION I: An examination of the context of the Brown (1954) decision, legal challenges and entanglements that emerged, and the extent to which efforts toward educational equity (including busing, residential patterns, racial quotas, redistribution of resources, and citizens initiatives) have or have not succeeded since the 1954 Supreme Court decision.

Participants: Millicent E. Brown, Claflin University
Eric M. Freedman and John DeWitt Gregory, Maurice A. Deane School of Law,
Hofstra University

Noon-1 p.m. LUNCH (on your own)

1-3 p.m. SESSION II: Testimonies and discussion with school desegregation pioneers from varying geographic regions. Long Island and New York/New Jersey area participants join with those from outside the region to offer insights into the processes and challenges (positive and negative) they experienced as youths.

Participants: Millicent E. Brown, Claflin University
Benétta M. Standly, American Civil Liberties Union of Florida
Deborah Wright, Avery Research Center, College of Charleston
Françoise N. Hamlin, Brown University

3:30-6:30 p.m. FILM/DOCUMENTARY VIEWINGS

The Intolerable Burden (60 min.), produced by Constance Curry
Introduced by Constance Curry
In the autumn of 1965, black sharecroppers Mae Bertha and Matthew Carter enrolled eight of their children in previously white public schools in Drew, Mississippi. They were responding to a “freedom of choice” plan submitted by the Drew School Board to the federal government in order to receive federal funding. Given the prevailing attitudes, blacks were not expected to choose white schools, but the Carters did so. The Intolerable Burden shows the Carters’ commitment to obtaining a quality education by examining segregation prior to 1965, the hardships the family faced during desegregation, and the massive white resistance, which has led to resegregation. The film poses the dilemma of “education vs. incarceration,” a particular threat to youth of color. These patterns are increasingly apparent throughout public education systems in the United States.

A Tale of Two Schools: Race and Racism on Long Island (30 min.), produced by ERASE Racism,
Introduced by Elaine Gross
This documentary follows David and Owen, two African American teenagers, during their senior year of high school. Even though the students have a lot in common, they go to very different schools. A Tale of Two Schools spotlights these differences and the results of educational disparities. The film also focuses on the benefits that diversity provides for all students.

Tavis Smiley Reports: Too Important to Fail (60 min.), produced by PBS
This documentary takes a clear-eyed look at the challenges facing African American teenage boys as they navigate their way to adulthood. With the high school dropout rate among black boys approaching 50 percent, this film examines the obstacles these boys confront and puts a very human face on the statistics. An inspiring story of hope and accomplishment, Too Important to Fail provides a roadmap for what can be done to provide all teens with the tools they need to succeed.

The Memphis 13 produced by Daniel Kiel and Jane Folk
First grade can be a very scary thing, even without the burden of making history. On October 3, 1961, the burden of historic change would ride on the shoulders of 13 black children specifically chosen to integrate four all-white schools. As Kiel says, the selection of first-grade children, who would become the “torch-bearers” of integration at Gordon, Rozelle, Bruce and Springfield elementary schools, was at the core of the non-court ordered action.

TOWN HALL: Community and educational policy activists share insights into the ongoing attempts to achieve educational equity, as envisioned by Brown. Examples will be shared of those efforts and policies deemed both “successful” and “unsuccessful” to close longstanding achievement gaps based on racial, ethnic, income and geographical differences. Model programs such as the NOAH initiative (Hofstra’s Arthur O. Eve Higher Education Opportunity Program) will be explored in contrast to other preparatory and support projects in addressing whether the most important questions are being considered in relation to equity, and where educational policy can still be improved to address the growing educational crisis confronting the nation as a whole.
