

Hofstra's Labor Studies Program & National Center for Suburban Studies present

WHEN: Wednesday, Nov. 17th, 2010
1:55 – 3:30 pm

WHERE: Leo Guthart Cultural Center Theater
(Axinn Library, 1st floor), Hofstra University, Hempstead, NY

Long Island is today being transformed by waves of new immigration. As hundreds of thousands of newcomers from Asia, Latin America and elsewhere have moved here, their effects on local jobs, incomes and economic activity have become subjects of often passionate public debate – but without much hard data to evaluate the many conflicting claims.

You are invited to the release of a major report that provides fresh statistical evidence on the current costs and benefits of immigrants in the Long Island economy. Come hear the new findings and discussion of their implications by:

David Kallick – Senior Fellow, Fiscal Policy Institute

Patrick Duggan – Former Nassau County Deputy Executive

Pearl Kamer – Chief Economist, Long Island Association

Omar Angel Perez – Executive Director, Workplace Project

Presented by Hofstra's Labor Studies Degree Program and the National Center for Suburban Studies. FREE ADMISSION. First come/first seated. For other information, call: 516/463-5040 or visit: www.hofstra.edu/laborstudies.
