WHAT: Baboon Skull Medicine Object (nkisi mbumba) of the Vili and Yombe people
WHERE: Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Africa
WHEN: 19th/20th Century

WHY: Concern with spiritual powers is key in many African cultures. These powers often involve representations of familiar animals that take on human characteristics and spiritual powers. The animals become the focus of rituals, stories and beliefs. Primates, one of the most abundant mammals found in western Africa, often symbolize the wild spirits of the bush or the mysterious world outside the village. In art, monkeys represent spirits that can ward off enemies. The Vili and Yombe people believe that spirits inhabit special mysterious objects. These “power objects,” called “nkisi mbumba” are usually containers that hold spiritually-charged materials which, through rituals, become channels for activating the spiritual forces. This skull owned by the Museum is housed in an intricately knotted holder and may have served as a container for magical medicinal substances that healed.

CURRICULUM CONNECTIONS

In what ways are world communities similar and different?*

The monkey symbol is often thought to represent medicinal or curative power. The Vili and Yombe people believe it carries the magical powers of healing and is, therefore, a sacred place to store medicine.

Writing Activity: Have your students think about a symbol of their choice that can be thought of as having some magical power. Create a fable about this powerful object and the positive impact it may have had on others. What does your object symbolize? What good did or does it bring to others?

Science Activity: Create a two-panel brochure. Panel 1: Research and describe how we treat common illnesses such as a cold or the flu today. Panel 2: Compare today’s treatment with how people in the past treated disease.
