FILMING LBJ: A SPECIAL COLLECTION FROM WHITE HOUSE NAVAL PHOTOGRAPHER COMMANDER THOMAS ATKINS, 1963-1969

The Lyndon B. Johnson presidency is unique in its collection of recordings of the chief executive's activities. In the 1960s, the White House Naval Photographic Unit (NPC) began producing films that highlighted special presidential trips, visits, and events. Commander Thomas Atkins produced these films for the NPC, starting in 1963 in the John F. Kennedy administration and continuing through the Johnson years. About 43 of the 70+ films are available for viewing on the Lyndon B. Johnson Library's YouTube channel at <https://www.youtube.com/playlist?list=PL853F6EAB74B64D1D>.

Hofstra University's Peter S. Kalikow Center for the Study of the American Presidency has a full digitized set of the Atkins films, which are available for research in the Joan and Donald E. Axinn Library's Special Collections room. In the summer of 2013, Ms. Nancy Lindemeyer (who, along with her husband, Robert Lindemeyer, served with Commander Atkins in the Navy) contacted Hofstra on behalf of the Atkins family to see if the Kalikow Center might be a suitable repository for the collection. Thanks to the generosity of the Atkins family and the cheerful, unstinting efforts of the Lindemeyers, the original 16 mm films were transferred to DVDs and became part of Hofstra's holdings in 2015.

The transfer of the Atkins collection of LBJ films was announced officially in December 2015, when Hofstra hosted a one-day symposium about LBJ, "A Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the Voting Rights Act of 1965: The Promise and the Challenge." Mr. and Mrs. Lindemeyer attended the symposium and shared their recollections of Commander Atkins's production of the LBJ films, as well as their memories of the president. Atkins's assistant, Mr. William (Bill) Fisher also participated in the symposium, as did scriptwriter Don Peterson. LBJ biographer and two-time Pulitzer Prize winner Robert Caro delivered the keynote address and discussed the importance of the Atkins films for a comprehensive understanding of the Johnson presidency.

In Fall 2015, Dr. Meena Bose, Director of the Kalikow Center, taught a special seminar about the LBJ presidency, in which students viewed and wrote short summaries of selected films in the Atkins collection. Those summaries are included on this website, as is a partly annotated list prepared by research assistant Reid Kleinberg in the summer of 2015. As students continue to conduct research with these unique primary sources on Johnson, the list of annotations will be expanded.

The films are available to the public for research at Hofstra, following the rules of the Special Collections Room. We welcome you to visit the library and view this unique window into understanding the personality and leadership style of President Lyndon B. Johnson.

LBJ FILMS STUDENT SUMMARIES (SELECTED FILMS)

April/May 1964

Summary #1

Lyndon B. Johnson embarked on what became known as “The Poverty Tours” in April and May of 1964. These tours were LBJ’s first sightings of the economically distressed urban and rural areas since he announced his War on Poverty. In this particular film, Lyndon B. Johnson’s presidential stature truly shines as he makes his way state-by-state speaking to citizens and groups about his efforts in eradicating poverty in America.

LBJ stops on the streets by motorcade to deliver a variety of impromptu speeches to small citizen groups, carrying the message that the country must be united in “our” efforts against poverty. Through these small speeches, he inspires all citizens who are witnesses and listening to join his War on Poverty.

This film shows LBJ’s devotion to the War on Poverty. He goes on this tour to not only push for legislation, but to listen and learn from the actual American people because as a leader, he truly cared and wanted to give them a better break economically. He appears strong and devoted, as well as genuine in his efforts, going around the states and inspiring every crowd when he states, “no president can be stronger than the people behind him.” He makes them feel important and significant in making the War on Poverty successful. This film provides great insight to LBJ’s personality and leadership style as a president in action.

Summary #2

In April and May of 1964, the White House Naval Photographic Unit followed Lyndon B. Johnson on a tour across the country. The president’s mission was to eradicate the mass poverty that afflicted Americans in the 1960s. The “War on Poverty,” as Johnson declared it, was the most ambitious part of the Great Society. He was followed from the rural streets of South Bend, Indiana, to enthusiastic state universities, to deep within Pittsburg’s steel country, giving stump speeches and embracing his electorate. The tours played an important role in gaining popular support from all groups of people: young and old, male and female, white and black, for the $947.5 million antipoverty legislation Johnson signed into law in August of that year.

January 20, 1965 Inauguration

This film focuses on January 20, 1965: President Johnson’s Inauguration Day. It details the Inaugural Parade, which included many floats and student groups honoring the new President, Vice President Hubert Humphrey, and First Lady. Many of the groups that marched were representative of President Johnson's home state of Texas or Vice President Humphrey's home state of Minnesota. There is also a segment honoring each state with a float representative of what it is best known for. The parade recognized many of President Johnson's accomplishments during his first term and the ones he hoped to make in the term to come.

February 1966: Beyond the War (019/Box 2-1)

Summary #1

This film served to document the events of the conference in Honolulu where the Declaration of Honolulu was signed on February 4th to February 8th, 1966. The film is comprised of compilations of still photographs and moving picture scenes of the convention. It begins with LBJ's announcement to the public on February 4th, 1966 of the conference with South Vietnam officials regarding the war, one day prior to its start. The film progresses with the arrival of LBJ in Honolulu. Shortly after his arrival, Johnson met with General Westmoreland and decided to deploy more troops at the general's discretion in aid of South Vietnam. The following day, Johnson gives a speech to the American public regarding the United States' further involvement in the Vietnam conflict with hopes of peace and the victory of South Vietnam.

An official meeting ensued between U.S. and South Vietnam officials with discussions of rural construction, agricultural advancement, education, health care infrastructure, training and education of refugees, dealing with inflation in war torn country, developing a democratic constitution and holding open and fair elections, and how to effectively manage and end the war.

A series of seminars followed on February 7th with regards to social, economic, and political development. On February 8th, the 4-article Declaration of Honolulu was signed stating South Vietnam pledges to continue to fight against North Vietnamese and form a stable and viable economy centered on a democratic government, to draft a democratic constitution, work towards free elections. LBJ returned to Washington D.C. that evening and addressed the American people about progress made during the conference and the purpose of the Declaration of Honolulu.

Throughout the film, whether in the still photos or the moving picture, LBJ is depicted as a vulnerable, compassionate, and extremely hard-working individual. Although qualities such as compassion and vulnerability are rarely associated with LBJ, the intimacy of these monthly films reveals otherwise through photos of him deep in thought regarding the war or video clips showing him interacting with children. This film offers a close and personal perspective, in which some more relatable and emotional sides of LBJ are demonstrated.

This film chronicles a February 1966 trip by President Johnson and many top administration officials to Honolulu for a conference with South Vietnam's leaders, which was designed to focus on the military, political, and economic conditions surrounding the still undeclared "war." Johnson's hands-on leadership is depicted in the film, as he is shown in a series of one-on-one meetings with South Vietnamese officials, along with participating in small-group sessions attended by both U.S. and South Vietnamese dignitaries. The film accurately portrays the effect Johnson's persistent personality had on his presidential leadership. Throughout the conference, Johnson juxtaposes his Great Society agenda, which was designed to help the domestic poor, with the U.S. strategy in Vietnam. When analyzing Johnson's presidential leadership in the Vietnam War, it would be useful to contrast the Johnson seen in Honolulu to the one whose decisions on the same war would ultimately lose him the public support he so much desired, and drive him from the one office he felt he was born to hold.

The film titled "The Asian Odyssey" covers Lyndon Johnson's 1966 trip to Asia. During the course of the trip he visited Hawaii, American Samoa, New Zealand, Australia, the Philippines, South Vietnam, Thailand, Malaysia, and South Korea. The trip was based around the 1966 Manila Summit Conference.

For President Johnson, one of the main goals of the trip was to cement support for the Saigon government and the U.S.'s Vietnam War effort among America's Asian allies. He met with many heads of state and government during the trip, including: Prime Minister Harold Holt of Australia, President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines, and President Park Chung-hee of South Korea. At the Manila summit all the leaders released a joint communiqué, which stated that among their top goals were freedom from aggression for all, and the elimination of hunger, poverty, and disease. Johnson then went to South Vietnam, where he awarded a medal to General Westmoreland as well as to many of the soldiers. This trip helped Johnson frame the war in Vietnam as an allied effort against communism in South East Asia, as opposed to just some conflict that America had gotten into unilaterally.

The Beyond the War film takes place in February 1966 when Lyndon B. Johnson attends the Honolulu Conference, in which Johnson's administration met with South Vietnam government officials to discuss the imminent danger of communism and help them in efforts of combating it. Throughout the conference, Johnson organizes a series of seminars between Vietnam officials and American officials to teach the Vietnamese about democracy, construction, rural electrification, schools and teachers, medical schools, equipment, training and education to refugees, how to build the basis of a democratic Constitution, how to keep peace, and how to effectively run the war. At the end of the conference, both America and Vietnam sign the Declaration of Honolulu, in which South Vietnam vowed to continue the fight against communist by building a stable and viable economy around a true democracy.

Johnson's actions in bringing more than just military officials to the conference exhibit that his plans with Vietnam extended far beyond the military strategy of the war. He wanted to help South Vietnam build the society that he thought it wanted—"one free from any external interference." The film demonstrates Johnson's leadership style when it came to foreign policy, in which Johnson chose to educate the Vietnamese rather than command them. This is a stark comparison to how he dealt with domestic affairs, in which he took command because he felt confident in his experience and knowledge on domestic matters. Although he might have been this way because he wasn't confident in his knowledge on foreign policy, Johnson exhibits excellent diplomacy throughout the film.

Faces of the West (1966)

Although this is an LBJ film, the film's focus is not on the LBJ that was president. Instead, this film's focus is on Lady Bird Johnson and a four day tour that she took of the American Southwest, stopping along the way to give speeches, dedicate parks, and sightsee. The film opens with Lady Bird and others boarding a plane to California. After arriving, Lady Bird traveled east, through California, Arizona, and New Mexico. Interspersed between the sections with Lady Bird, a narrator would take time to introduce each location while scenes that highlighted the region's beauty were shown. Lady Bird visited several locations, including San Francisco, the Monterrey Peninsula, the San Carlos Mission, the Big Sur Highway, la Casita Encantada, Glen Canyon Dam, Santa Fe, and the San Ildefonso Pueblo. The film concludes with Lady Bird stopping in New Mexico to visit Antonio Taylor and his wife (Lady Bird's brother and sister-in-law) at the end of the fourth day.

Faces of the West gives the viewer a better understanding and appreciation of the first lady herself. Although photographs and other films do capture Lady Bird's image, there are far fewer recordings made during this time period showing Lady Bird separate from her husband and in action. This film also shows what a priority National Parks were to Lady Bird specifically. "It is of paramount importance," Lady Bird stated, "that we save and set aside enough sanctuaries for the future."

August 1966: "Golden Chalice" (022)

Summary #1

This film provides refreshing insight into the personal life of President Johnson by following the events leading up to the wedding of his daughter, Luci Baines Johnson. Though there isn't much presented regarding his presidency, Johnson's presence and ability to control a room, as the film accurately illustrates, correlate with his strong leadership style. The film covers a series of premarital parties in which the first family got together with either their future in-laws, foreign dignitaries, or other members of Washington political life, including the first wedding reception in history to be held at the Supreme Court. Johnson's capacity to control a room transcends his political livelihood, as is evidenced by the aggressive approach he took when creating conversations with those in attendance at the series of premarital receptions. At the conclusion of his presidency in 1968, Johnson was a defeated man; however before that downward spiral commenced, he was able to enjoy the marriage of his daughter, which likely brought him a sense of internal happiness comparable to his numerous political achievements. President Johnson's public perception was one of a professional politician. Viewing Johnson in such an informal setting as the events leading up to his daughter's wedding, helped humanize the thirty-sixth president in a way that would help remind the public of his humble roots.

Summary #2

For Lyndon B. Johnson, his presidency leaves a legacy of distaste for how he dealt with Vietnam and a sense of leadership in responding to domestic issues. However, after evaluating his personality through films, one can get a sense of who Johnson was, not just what he did.

August 1966 was a month of great importance for president Johnson. He balanced his work and his leisure time in that the film depicts Johnson as president and Johnson as a citizen of the United States. Managing the country is of course a feat in and of itself leaving Johnson very little time for relaxing. During this time period, it was insightful to see Johnson at his daughter Luci's wedding. Seeing pure enjoyment on his face is not something one particularly remembers about Johnson. This juxtaposes the rest of the film when Johnson meets with General Westmoreland where they then addressed the country about Vietnam. When meeting with Westmoreland, Johnson's personality overcomes the conversation when he appears introspective and needy in knowing the latest updates in the war. In an effort to assure the country that the sacrifices they were making were for the benefit of the nation, Johnson appears resolute and affirmed.

Lyndon B. Johnson was a master politician. He had a unique way of using language to get what he wanted from people. This was particularly useful for passing controversial bills in the Great Society. It also helped him in the beginning years of Vietnam, but this didn't last very long. Above all, Johnson was a strong promoter of national unity. However, he was much better at promoting this idea domestically rather than abroad.

The Johnson film The President August 1966 focuses on Johnson's interaction with different foreign officials as well as how he promoted his ideas for his Great Society. With foreign officials such as the President of Israel, Prime Minister of Canada, or an American military general in Vietnam, Johnson was very overbearing and intimidating. He would give a very firm handshake and lean in close to their faces. Johnson preferred face to face contact because this was where he thrived best. This is how he promoted his ideas for the Great Society. He would go to each state and explain his ideas, and then shake audience members' hands individually.

Summary #4

In August of 1966, the White House Naval Photographic Unit filmed President Lyndon B. Johnson performing a variety of personal and presidential duties across the nation. From food and football games to foreign and domestic initiatives, August 1966 was a busy time for the President. The war in Vietnam was escalating and the military draft struck fear in the hearts of most Americans. The film uncovers Johnson's "persistent, methodical, and sometimes exhausted" quest to uncover details about the war. At the same time, Johnson reasserted himself as the "all-American, family man," which was beneficial to his crippling public image. A relatively inexperienced president in the realm of foreign leadership, Johnson had to balance managing the war with promoting his domestic agenda, the Great Society.

October 1966: Asian Odyssey (026/Box 2-8)

Summary #1

This film largely contains color motion picture as well as color and black and white still photographs. The video begins with LBJ discussing the goals of the Vietnam War. He arrives in Honolulu on October 17, 1966 and from there he departs and begins most extensive Asian Odyssey in the American presidency. He visits American Samoa first, where the indigenous peoples put on cultural exhibitions for Johnson and Lady Bird. He then travels to New Zealand. He is the first American Chief Executive to receive Kia Ora, the traditional welcome of Maui warriors in New Zealand. Although majority of the video focuses on capturing locals at each destination, LBJ describes the purpose of the odyssey as promoting democratic development in Asia. On Oct. 21st, he arrives in Melbourne, Australia and is welcomed with much enthusiasm by the public. LBJ says in a speech, "There's no place like home, unless it is Australia." He confronts some hostility during his final stop in Australia, where he is greeted by anti-Vietnam war crowds. Johnson then visits Manila, Philippines and there he discusses the vast potential and hope for Asian development. By attending the Manila Summit Conference, LBJ becomes first president to attend a multination conference in Asia, where he signed a joint communiqué on Oct. 25th. The remainder of the film shows Johnson continuing his journey in Thailand, Malaysia, Vietnam, and South Korea. While in Bangkok, Thailand, he signed the International Education Act of 1966. LBJ returned on Nov. 2, 1966. The journey marked a new era of foreign policy and relations with the Pacific.

This film reveals some rather hidden elements of his personality, such as being shy and nostalgic. A motion picture scene shows Lady Bird and LBJ arriving in New Zealand, accepting garlands, tasting traditional food and drink, and watching dance performances. While Lady Bird is enjoying, however, LBJ appears somewhat uncomfortable. Lady Bird joins the natives in dancing and celebrating, but Johnson remains shy and reserved during the festivities. Throughout his life, he had not traveled out of the U.S. very much, with the exception of the goodwill tours across Asia Johnson and Lady Bird had made during his vice presidency.

He did enjoy himself at his final stop in New Zealand, however, when locals were shaving wool off of sheep and he began assisting with pulling shorn wool out of the way. This moment likely brought back memories of his childhood, growing up in rural Texas. Johnson's nostalgia revealed a humble side of him; he too could be a down to earth common person.

By 1966, President Johnson's main focus was the Vietnam War. After overseeing the increase of American involvement and amped up aggression from the Viet Cong and North Vietnam, Johnson faced lowered approval ratings domestically. For this reason, among others, Johnson traveled abroad to share his vision of respect, equality, and hope for Vietnam. President Johnson, along with a cohort of his closest advisors and his wife, Lady Bird Johnson, traveled to several countries in the Pacific. Throughout the course of the trip, President Johnson rallied listeners to stand steadfast in their commitment to bring peace in Vietnam. Key aspects of this trip were Johnson's authorization of the International Education Act of 1966 in Bangkok, Thailand, the Manila Conference in the Philippines, and his visit to the Cam Ranh Bay and Camp Stanley military bases.

October 1966: “The Asian Odyssey”

On October 17, 1966, United States President Lyndon B. Johnson embarked on what was at the time, the “most extensive presidential tour” of Asia and the Pacific. This over two week long diplomatic trip to eight different countries: the United States’ Pacific lands, New Zealand, Australia, the Philippines, South Vietnam (specifically American military bases in the country), Thailand, Malaysia and South Korea, was, to quote Johnson, conducted to usher in “a new era of unity and cooperation of the free peoples of Southeast Asia,” namely, the war-torn nation of South Vietnam. The tour occurred just around the time when President Johnson was controversially beginning to escalate the United States’ involvement in the war between South Vietnam and the communist controlled North Vietnam. The Hofstra University Axinn Library’s Special Collections archives contain a film documenting this trip entitled “The Asian Odyssey.”

The film spends time on Johnson’s visit to each of his destinations and includes several audio clips from Johnson himself discussing his travels. The film then descends into a mostly repetitive cycle of showing Johnson’s arrival in each country, followed by an elaborate welcome from the leaders and populace of the nation, complete with cultural practices, and large crowds carrying welcome signs. This in turn is followed by a sit-down meeting Johnson conducts with each country’s leader where they discuss both the situation in South Vietnam, as well as problem their own country is experiencing and trying to combat. An example of the latter is when President Johnson visited Los Banos, a large rice farm in the Philippines where he gave a famous speech promising that he will work to “win the war against poverty, disease and hungry stomachs.” The main event of Johnson’s journey occurred in the middle, where he attended a United Nations Summit in Manila, The Philippines, and discussed the progress of the war in Vietnam, and potential peace negotiations, along with the leaders of all the nations Johnson visited during the two weeks. A second interruption in Johnson’s tour occurred when he appropriately took a detour to visit American troops fighting the war in South Vietnam, and talk with military officers. There he made a promise that was ultimately unfulfilled, to “never let down” the troops fighting in the war effort. In short the film, through its use of audio quotes of the president’s actual speech displays that although he is popularly portrayed as a warmonger, at heart, President Johnson was actually a man of peace.

November 1966

November 1966 was a time for Lady Bird Johnson to showcase her talents as America’s “mother.” While traveling around the country to see the implementation of different programs created during the Johnson presidency, Lady Bird appears strong in upholding her husband’s vision. At the beginning of the film, Lady Bird greets newly naturalized citizens at the White House before boarding her plane to travel around the country. After seeing poor neighborhoods in need of repair near Xavier College, Lady Bird travels to the Cape Kennedy Merit Island to see the latest updates in space programming. She admires the ability of individuals working on individual projects to work towards a common goal. Her tour of the United States demonstrated a dedicated wife trying to support the mission of her husband.

January 1967

This film focuses on President Johnson's life in office during the month of January 1967, which was a turbulent time for the United States of America. The country had been fighting the war in Vietnam for nearly two years, and an end was not in sight, as President Lyndon B. Johnson mentioned during his State of the Union address. It includes footage from the launch of the March of Dimes campaign, the State of the Union Address, and a state dinner at the White House. Additionally, the film shows President Johnson giving the first Congressional Medal of Honor for service in Vietnam, the signing of the Outer Space Treaty and the funerals of the Apollo 1 astronauts. This film gives us a great deal of information about President Johnson's personality, leadership style, and presidency.

Summary #2

At the time of President Lyndon B. Johnson's State of the Union Address in January of 1967, the United States was engaged in two wars that would come to define the Johnson presidency. The first, aptly named the War on Poverty, was a symbolic war fought on U.S. turf that was aimed at combating a national poverty rate of about nineteen percent. The second was the ever-contentious war in Vietnam, which was part of a larger containment policy intended to stop the spread of communism. Johnson drew strength from a newly painted portrait of his political hero, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, as he prepared to address the country on both domestic achievement and international conflict that faced the United States in January 1967.

April 1967

The film, and the month both start with foreign issues, specifically a conference among the leaders of nearly every Latin American country. The goal of the meetings was to raise the quality of life of all Americans, north and south, and to facilitate greater economic cooperation in what LBJ called a common market. After a couple of meetings, LBJ invited all of the leaders on to Air Force 1 and flew them back to San Antonio to show them a real Texan barbeque. He then headed back out to Uruguay to continue the conference. While abroad Johnson was still occupied with many domestic issues such as the railroad strike. Being the President there is no one to directly share responsibility with, and even when dealing with big decisions abroad, everything still has to go through you. Johnson and everyone else knew that this was not a negotiation among equals. The United States was no way comparable, but it was said that what made Latin American leaders comfortable was Johnson himself. Johnson was highly regarded among his colleagues and did everything he could to help negotiations and be a friend, as evident by the BBQ he set up. Comparisons were made with Simon Bolivar in efforts for a greater continental cooperation. LBJ and Bolivar might not immediately seem so similar, but in the end both had great legacies in furthering the quality of life in South America. The conference was a big success with all but one nation signing on to the agreement.

July 1967

The film is an overview of the Johnson Presidency during July, 1967. LBJ attends a governor's conference in St. Louis, meets his newborn grandson on a working vacation, discusses common commitments with the German Chancellor, as well as LBJ personally signing military retirement papers, on top of Vietnam and domestic unrest. The film encompasses a ton of what LBJ is doing during the month. Key highlights are LBJ's vacation at his Texas ranch where the video stresses that he is continuously debriefed on issues and is actually working, as well as LBJ's address after riots in Detroit, "Being a reformer is to be responsible...not a wrecker of what man has made."

Summary #2

In July 1967, the Vietnam War and Civil Rights were major issues President Lyndon B. Johnson had to deal with. In order to deal with these controversial issues, Johnson had to listen to his advisors, experts and Civil Rights leaders. These scenes demonstrate how Johnson took charge of the conversations. For example, when Johnson was meeting with advisors to discuss the war in Vietnam, he sat back while listening to his advisors. As soon as he felt the need to speak, however, he sat forward and started gesturing at the advisors. Later in the film, he talks to his advisors about setting up a Civil Disorders Board to analyze why blacks were protesting. As he is explaining this to his advisors, the advisors appeared rather confused about the proposal but ultimately accepted what the president said. When he was in the public eye, however, he seemed happier and more laid back. For example, when he was honoring an army official, he smiled and seemed more human. This film therefore shows that Lyndon Johnson was a decisive leader amongst his advisors, but seemed more relaxed in the public sphere.

September 1967

Summary #1

The Hofstra University special collections archive film, "September 1967," documents the life of then President Lyndon B. Johnson during an especially difficult month of his life. The film opens with an audio recording of an eulogy Johnson wrote for his recently deceased friend Carl Sandburg in which he describes Sandburg as a "strong man who kept coming on" in face of adversity. The makers of the film chose to open, and later to close with this eulogy as this same mentality is also present in Johnson's character during the month. During September 1967, Johnson is faced with intensifying political battles; his approval ratings are plummeting as the country becomes more opposed to his escalation of the war in Vietnam, and a polarized congress seeks to block much of his Great Society domestic proposals such as a housing bill. Johnson also is occupied with personal matters, as his daughter Lynda is about to get married to her fiancé Chuck Robb. As shown by the film, although he is still, and arguably even more intensely, criticized for his policies in Vietnam, and many of his bills fail to pass Congress, by the end of the month, Johnson never gives up, and like his friend Carl Sandburg continues to be a "strong man who keeps coming on."

Summary #2

This film is set around the events of September of 1967. The film shows how Johnson juggles the responsibilities of the presidency and the entertaining expectations of a presidency. One of the most revealing parts of the film are the sections where LBJ is not working, but the time away from the job. After a busy week with the war, Johnson and his wife get away for the weekend and spend time with his family. The footage of LBJ engaging his new grandson and enjoying the nature with his wife are two scenes rarely ever associated with him. LBJ is always seen as this cold, calculated, political machine, but this softer side shows just how much the job takes a toll on him, and how just one weekend family getaway can mean so much for someone in such a demanding job. The shots with his new grandchild show such a warm side to Johnson, rarely seen elsewhere. After the trip, the contrast is striking; he is back in his cold political personality trying to push his agenda in Congress. Seeing the contrast form hard at work in the White House, to entertaining hundreds of guests at a fair on the White House lawn is very insightful. LBJ was more than just a political workhorse, but indulged in the entertaining side of the presidency, something that might seem out of character for LBJ. The scenes at the family farm also give insight to a warmer, and more caring side of Johnson than what he is commonly remembered for.

December 1967

As evidenced by the title, this LBJ film focuses on events that unfolded in the last half of December 1967. The film opens with Linda Johnson's wedding to Charles Robb, a decorated Marine Captain. After the ceremony, Lyndon Johnson and his family went to central Washington D.C. to light a large Christmas tree.

A few days later, the Prime Minister of Australia passed away. After receiving this news, Johnson planned a trip to Australia to pay his respects. While on route, Air Force One stopped at Travis Airforce Base to refuel. Once he arrived in Australia, Johnson gave a eulogy for the former prime minister. While in the area, Johnson decided to fly to the war zone and bolster morale. He first flew to an American military base in Thailand to give a speech to the bombing personnel and pilots there. During his stay, Johnson talked about how he believed that air power was an essential part of the war effort. "Air power," Johnson reasoned, "is providing the mobility which meets and matches the stealth of an enemy whose tactics are based on sudden hit and run tactics."

On December 23rd, Johnson made what the film called "an inevitable stop," South Vietnam. While there, Johnson delivered speeches to the stationed troops. Johnson explicitly stated that "the enemy cannot win now in Vietnam. He can harass. He can terrorize. He can inflict casualties by taking greater losses himself. But he just cannot win."

After Vietnam, Johnson flew to Kirachi, Pakistan to visit with the Pakistani President and then to Rome to meet with Pope Paul. Once finished in Rome, Johnson flew back to the United States, just in time for Johnson's first Christmas at the White House.

The film is a documentation of Lynda Johnson's wedding to Captain Charles Robb. Although a lot of the film is an interview about leading up to their wedding, a lot is revealed about LBJ. There are multiple receptions, and one is with LBJ and Lady Bird's 33rd wedding anniversary where they discuss the importance of partnership and family support. At one point, Lynda and Chuck discuss matters of the U.S. and it appears as if there is a disconnect between their jovial attitudes and the unrest being felt by most citizens. One lighter moment is LBJ's toast to Chuck, where he discusses the advantages of his job by ripping up the Secret Service reports he has on him, since he started dating Lynda.

January 1968

This film covers the first month of President Johnson's last year in office, January 1968. A large part of this film is devoted to Johnson's preparing and giving of the State of the Union address. Johnson is depicted diligently working with his aides trying to prepare a seamless speech. While conferring in the White House with individual Congressional leaders before the speech, he is shown sharing a jovial moment with then Republican House minority leader Gerald R. Ford. A key point made by the film is that although President Johnson's State of the Union was to focus a lot on the pressing foreign policy issues of the time, he made sure to devote enough of the speech to domestic considerations. In the speech Johnson makes clear that the Vietnam War is test of United States' will, not its strength.

The film also depicts the January 7 visit of Prime Minister and Mrs. Eshkol of Israel to the LBJ ranch. They discussed issues of mutual concern in the wake of the June 1967 Six Day War. The film ends with President Johnson managing and dealing with the U.S.S. Pueblo crisis, involving North Korea, and then the infamous Tet Offensive in South Vietnam. Johnson is shown dealing with a variety of issues and crises throughout the film, however it is clear that at this point in his presidency Johnson does not have the energy and vigor typical of an incoming president.

February 1968

At this point in his presidency, Lyndon Johnson was overwhelmed with the Vietnam War, so much so that a month later he would announce that he would neither seek nor accept the Democratic Party nomination in order to focus on his duties as Commander-in-Chief. The aggressive Tet Offensive mounted by the Viet Cong and North Vietnam surprised American and South Vietnamese troops and made Americans back at home all the more adamant about bringing an end to the war. In addition to specific domestic triumphs like the passage of the Commodity Exchange Act, there was one key moment in the film, a meeting of the National Security Council, that was demonstrative of President Johnson's the uncertainty with which he navigated the Vietnam War. During February of 1968, Johnson continued to try and court public support, imploring Americans to be prepared to "back [their] beliefs with steel" and remain committed to stopping the aggression of communism in the east.

December 1967, February 1968 and March 1968

These were a rough few months for President Lyndon Johnson. In the beginning of the film, the president seems happy and relaxed. He traveled around the world and thanked the American soldiers for their service and said that the American people are proud of them. By February, however, the United States was reeling from the Tet Offensive and President Johnson seemed exhausted. He had bags under his eyes; but he still pointed and gestured to his advisors to show that he was in charge. As he spoke to the nation to tell them that he was sending more troops, he seemed more serious than he did in December. In March, this exhaustion and stress seemed to continue. At the end of the month, he spoke slowly in a televised speech and appeared rather sad. The speech concluded with him saying that he will not seek reelection. This was a big difference from the Lyndon Johnson seen at the beginning of the film. In the beginning of the film, he was relaxed and confident in himself; but by the end of the film he was so drained and knew he was so unpopular that he would not even run for reelection.

April 1968

The Johnson film The President April 1968 focuses on domestic policies. In particular, it shows how he pressed for civil rights legislation after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It also shows the speech in which Johnson announces that he will not run for a second term. This was mainly due to the unpopular decisions that plagued him in the Vietnam War. This film also shows clips of his hour-long sessions with his advisors in Vietnam.

November 1968

When Lady Bird Johnson embarked on her farewell tour as First Lady of the United States in November 1968, she did so not for the fanfare that accompanies the First Lady on a six thousand-mile journey across the country, but for the purpose of securing her husband's legacy of passing landmark legislation that granted many citizens new life in America. From the restoration of the New Orleans Old French Quarter under the Beautification Act to the preparations for the ambitious launch of Apollo 8 at Kennedy Space Center, Lady Bird Johnson witnessed first-hand the implementation and resulting ramifications of many of the major programs instituted under her husband's five years as president. At a time when public hostility toward President Johnson had reached an all-time high, Lady Bird was called on to act as a surrogate of the president in order to emphasize the great progress the country made under his administration. Mrs. Johnson, as per usual, executed the task with dignity and poise emblematic of the legacy she left as FLOTUS.
