Sutton, Horace, 1919-1991. Papers, c. 1948-1991
148.6 c.f.

Biographical Note

Horace Sutton was a pre-eminent travel writer, working from the late 1940s to the late 1980s for a variety of travel and leisure publications. At the peak of his career, he travelled at least 100,000 miles a year, visiting both popular tourist destinations and secluded areas of the world. He wrote eleven books, including the "Footloose" series, which served as a continuous sequence of work throughout his career.

Before World War II, Sutton worked in the advertising department of The New York Post. After the war, during which he served as a captain in Army Intelligence, he returned to The Post as a reporter and travel writer. He joined the Saturday Review in the late 1940's.

Sutton continued to write for the Saturday Review for more than 30 years, first as travel editor and later as editorial director of the magazine. He also began travel sections for Sports Illustrated and McCall's and was the editor-in-chief of Citicorp's publication, Signature magazine, from 1981 to 1985.

Horace Sutton won many awards for his travel writing, including an award from the Overseas Press Club for his coverage of a military counter-coup in Indonesia in 1965. He died in late October, 1991.

Scope and Content Note

This collection consists of both original articles written by Horace Sutton between the years 1948 to the late 1980s, as well as copies of numerous publications for which he wrote. Also included in the collection are Sutton's travel notebooks, which provide first-hand accounts of his trips. Other components of the collections include photographs of his destinations, speeches, and correspondence.
