Applying for an Individual Fellowship

Rockefeller Foundation Resident Fellowships are meant to serve scholars who are testing disciplinary boundaries or moving into newer fields of inquiry within the humanities and the study of culture. Although the majority of the fellow’s time will be spent pursuing his or her own research toward publication, the residency may involve participation in seminars, conferences or other collaborative activities within the host program. Awards may not be used for the completion of graduate studies, for advanced training, or for writing poetry or fiction. Complete information about eligibility, stipends and procedures for application is available directly from current host institutions, as described below.

Applying to Become a Rockefeller Foundation Host Institution

The Rockefeller Resident Fellowships in the Humanities and the Study of Culture are hosted by programs in colleges, universities and other institutions such as libraries, museums and community cultural centers with an engaged community of scholars and other international or intercultural resources of value to scholarship in the humanities. Applications will be accepted only from sites in the United States. For the 2003 competition, the proposed research project should outline a humanistic or cultural analysis of the circumstances of poor and excluded communities, either in a historical or contemporary context. The project can investigate such topics as the obstacles posed to the cultural resilience of poor and excluded communities or, conversely, the cultural assets that allow poor and excluded communities to sustain and transform themselves. A range of interdisciplinary humanistic lenses can be utilized for formulating the programmatic and theoretical framework for the project: cultural expression and heritage; race, ethnicity, gender or sexuality; migratory processes; religion; or trauma and conflict are merely suggestive of the approaches to the study of cultural resilience in poor and excluded communities that will be the Resident Fellows Program’s thematic concern in 2003. The application process is two-tiered: a five-page letter of intent is due on November 1, 2002; based on these letters, a smaller number of sites will be encouraged to submit full proposals by March 3, 2003. For further information, contact Tom Murphy in the Office for Research and Sponsored Programs at extension 3-6810.
